AMBER SHARP
Creator/Writer/Director

Amber Sharp began directing her daydreams at the age of five. Later as a graduate of Project Offstreet, a program for homeless youth, Amber's drive and determination led her to graduate from the Arts High School in Minneapolis, Minnesota and Simmons College in Boston, Massachusetts despite being on her own since her junior year of high school.

While studying English and African American Studies in college, the budding writer-director decided to share her daydreams with the world by becoming a filmmaker. To master her craft, she enrolled and graduated from the USC School of Cinema. Amber's USC thesis film, Triple Minority, has been an audience favorite at numerous film festivals, including the 2006 Pan African Film Festival in Los Angeles, 2006 London Lesbian and Gay Film Festival, and Frameline 30: San Francisco International Film Festival. The film was awarded the audience award of Best Female Short Film in the 2006 Long Island Gay and Lesbian Film Festival. The film recently premiered on MTV's LOGO cable channel and appears on the web as part of The Click List: Best In Short Films on www.logoonline.com. Wolfe video, the leading distributor of gay and lesbian film, will distribute Triple Minority as part of their 2007 Best of Girl Shorts compilation DVD.

Since graduating from USC, Amber has worked with such industry heavyweights as Patrick Ian Polk ("Noah's Arc"), Kasey Lemmons ("Caveman's Valentine"), Edmonds Entertainment, and Debbie Allen ("Fame"). As the principal of A.Sharp Productions, she is building on her industry experience as she enters pre-production of her original television pilot, "Don't Go."
